Slate Sequoia combines brown, ivory and green.

Prints imitate stone

Until now, the highly desirable look of stone kitchen and bathroom benchtops has been out of reach for those without a budget that stretches to natural stone's premium price tag.

The latest collection from Laminex, called 180fx, recreates the aesthetic appeal of natural stone at a more affordable price using innovative new printing technology that replicates its colour variations, intricate veining and layering.

The range includes six stone patterns, including Carrera Marble, featuring charcoal and light grey veining against a creamy white background, and the lighter Silver Travertine.

Soapstone Sequoia and Breccia Paradiso feature tonal greys, while Slate Sequoia combines shades of brown, ivory and green, and Black Fossilstone provides a dark, sumptuous look.

Each of the patterns is available in either a matte or DiamondGloss finish with matching acrylic edging.
